Many special needs children see the world with their fingertips. They learn best through “doing” and “feeling” activities. Also, some special needs children have challenges with their sensory skills and may have unusual habits when it comes to touch. These play structures for special needs children will help develop a child’s sensory skills, while making them more comfortable with touching different textures.

* Sponsors: please email your company’s logo to McHughJ@eastfishkillny.org no later than June 22, 2019
